Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .From the INTRODUCTION. THE wealth of a country, it has been well said, is the value of what it produces. Production, therefore, is the basis of national prosperity. In all discussion of questions affecting or related to the material condition of the people-their industries, their earnings, and their savings-this primary and fundamental fact must be borne in mind. The first indictment, of a popular nature, of Free Trade, and especially of one-sided and partial Free Trade, is, that it imperils and sacrifices national production by the favoured introduction of universal and unreciprocated external competition. There is no possible escape from condemnation on this head for a system which displaces domestic labour by foreign, and reduces to a dangerous and destructive degree the security and remuneration of industrial capital. No one can now deny that this is the result of our present system of free import of competing foreign productions of land and labour, alongside of the successful maintenance of their protective system by foreign States, and their exhausting revenue tariffs upon most of what they permit into their markets of British and Irish production. It is usual, however, for the professional advocates of the Free Trade policy of this country to attempt to justify it, not so much by any defence, or direct apology for it, on its essential merits, as by inferences in its favour derived from a misrepresentation of the policy of Protection. The most systematic and audacious misrepresentation of facts, and the most persistent falsification of history, are now the sole basis for popular belief in it or patience with it. The Corn Law controversy is falsely described and disposed of. The temporary and artificial prosperity of this country...
