Not illustrated. 1909 Excerpt: .Transportation, which comprises most of the Continental European states, and which has unified the European international freight traffic by the creation of a code by which shipping contracts and the relations of responsibility are regulated. A code of this kind constitutes a very decided achievement in international administration. It does away with great impediments to the development of commerce in that it assures uniformity and a definite understanding with respect to the legal relations between shipper and rail way administration. Eorty-six governments are interested also in the International Association of Railway Congresses, the seventh session of which was held at Washington in 1905. Ihe object of these congresses is by discussion on a broad plane to foster progress along the lines of technical achievement and economic science related to railway transportation. There is a similar association of navigation congresses, in which twenty-five states are represented; and...
