The system of internal government of the academy is purely military. The Battalion.--The cadets are organized into a battalion, consisting of four companies. Each company corresponds to one of the classes of study. The first class, or cadets in their fourth year, form the first company, and a similar rule obtains for the other classes. The officers and non-commissioned officers are selected from the most meritorious cadets of the three higher classes. The first class furnishes the officers, the This is an error. The cadet companies are composed indiscriminately of the four classes. second class the sergeants, and the third class the corporals. The duty of the adjutant is performed by daily roster. Uniform.--The uniform is quite elegant; it is of grayish-blue color, with dark-blue braid. It consists of a dress-coat with three rows of buttons; a riding jacket; a coat to be worn during study hours; an overcoat; trousers, a dress-hat and forage-cap. There are also a vest for winter, and a linen vest for summer; but these are not obligatory. Chevrons, worn upon the sleeve, are used to mark the grades of cadet officers. The buttons are an inch in diameter and are inscribed U. S. M. A.--United States Military Academy. Pay of Cadets.--The cadets receive pay, but the amount has often varied. In 1802, it was sixteen dollars per month and two rations. In 1857, the rations were cut off and the pay increased to twenty-four...
