Attention will be given also to the content and form of operating reports for the guidance of various responsible officials and superintendents. Some attention will be given to methods or devices for calculation, such as logarithms and the slide rule. The course is open only to students who have taken Accounting Principles. Accounting Problems Associate Professor Cole. Mon. , Wed. , and (at the pleasure of the instructor) Fri. , at 12. Analytical power, breadth of view, initiative, and resourcefulness, with regard to accountancy, are cultivated in this course. The problems considered are chosen almost wholly from fields where no legal prescription or formal traditional program of procedure can direct the student in his work. He is forced to fall back on his knowledge of principles, his knowledge of business practice, his power of analysis, and his native judgment. The problems considered during any year are determined in part by the general needs of the students, and in part by the expected special lines which students are likely to follow after graduation. Business practice is so closely related with law and so conditioned by it at every point that it is advisable and even necessary that students of business have some acquaintance with this essential feature of their environment. They do not need to have a knowledge of legal procedure and the other matters which have been termed...
