Although there are serious difficulties in getting from the Gulf shore up to the Plateau, these do not exist to any important extent in getting down to Manzanillo, on the Pacific side, the barrancas being avoided by following the slopes of the Couyahanna River between Zapotlan and Colima. Manzanillo is a good and well-sheltered harbor, probably the best on the Pacific coast of Mexico from Panama to Guaymas. It contains deep water close to the beach, and the soundings made by Mr. VonMotz, of our Engineer Party, showed a depth of 30 feet of water, within 60 yards of the shore. It has no sunken rocks, is probably large enough for all purposes, in...
