I wish to express my sincere thanks to that institution for the exceptional opportunities afforded by the fellowship. Professor E. L. Mark of Harvard University suggested this field for investigation, and I am also indebted to him for kindly advice and criticism. The work was carried on in 1904-1905 at the Bermuda Biological Station and in the Harvard Zoological Laboratories while I was registered as a Graduate Student in Radcliffe College. In the spring of 1905 the problem was continued at the Naples Zoological Station, through the kindness of the Association for Maintaining the American Women's Table at the Zoological Station at Naples and for Promoting Scientific Research by Women. I am under obligation to those in charge of the Naples Station for many courtesies extended throughout my stay. During the year 1905-1906 laboratory privileges were kindly afforded me for further work...
