Forgotten Books, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The Psychology of the Club: A Study in Social Psychology Scott characterizes the period from 9 to 12 as one of increased activity in which the games are cooperative but poorly organized His data are gathered from returns to a questionnaire sent out in Springfield, Mass. In 90 cases the returns came from adults; in the other 490 they were from boys of 10 to 18 years. Boys not belonging to a group were asked whether they had a few chums. The returns showed that belonged to a group and that 18 of the others had chums. Scott considers a group containing less than 5 as too small to constitute a gang; if 4 boys associate together he considers them as chums. Groups as large as 9 were found among the younger boys. With increasing age the size of the group decreased. He declares the period from 12 to 14 to be that of the closely organized group. Two-thirds of the boys he questioned said that their gangs had secrets, though sometimes this was nothing more than a certain whistle or call. One half of them had some sort of an initiation. The period from 6 to 10 is the time when the formation of chumship is most frequent, according to Bonser (i l). In studying 756 boys and girls in Illinois he found that the tendency toward chumming becomes very strong in girls as early as 5 years and reaches its height at 6, when 15 of such friendships were formed. Among boys this tendency develops a little later and reaches its minimum at 10. Bonser treats only the relationships between two individuals, on the basis that three is a...
