LAP Lambert Academic Publishing, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Aufl.. Language: English . Brand New Book. Before now, all telephony services are based on the circuit-switched networks, known as the Public Switched Telephone Networks (PSTN). But nowadays, a new trend has emerged that provides telephony services over internet protocol networks, referred to as Voice over IP (VoIP) or IP telephony. There are a few driving force and motivational factors that are behind the VoIP network - the cost savings, the voice and data applications? integration etc are the crux of the innovation. The cost saving is achieved mainly by reduced cost of making a long distance call, maintenance, deployment, management etc., while the integrated applications of voice and data are teleconferencing, integrated voice mail and email, the call distribution intelligence and automation. Therefor, with this era of innovative business practices in information technology that involves voice and data networks integration, both transmitted over the internet and implemented on a local area network (LAN).This book is undoubtedly beneficial to Small and Medium sized businesses for convergence of data and voice networks in their existing data network to accommodate the VoIP solution in the same LAN.
