When her dad, Nick is rushed to hospital with a smashed shoulder, he and Kikarin eavesdrop on a strange, muted conversation behind the curtains of the next bed. The patient . . . Lady Wilton . . . seems to have been saved from committing suicide by her daughter. What could have driven her into taking such desperate measures? Her salvation quietly becomes an obsession for Nick. This is the story of Kiri, a beautiful older-than-her-years English-Japanese teenager who moves with her family from Putney to the Scottish Borders when her father accepts a job as Forestry Manager. She is abruptly pulled out of her West London comfort zone to a world of no Broadband, no mobile phone signal and no friends. Her beauty catches the attention of Chris, the landowner's son as well as the unwelcome interest of his father and her dad's boss, the Laird, Lord Roderick Duncan. When Lord Duncan offers to help with her research into ritual iron-age cultures she reluctantly agrees to meet him. But he lures and then traps her in the old waiting...
