Not illustrated. 1920 Excerpt: . . . consequential, eructating inconsistent and misleading laboratory reports. We refer especially to a recent attempt by a prominent medical journal to discredit the iodine content of Unguentum Iodi, M. and J. , having published analyses which, in themselves, prove incompetency on the part of their chemist, inasmuch as the three analyses made showed a variation of nearly 1 per cent. in the findings. Chemists who are not familiar with oil examinations are apt to think that iodine in organic bodies, more especially oil or the paraffine bases, is as closely bound as is iodine in KI, an inorganic salt, and more especially when they cannot determine the exact vehicle or basic contents. Consequently, iodine is lost by volatization through faulty technique, resulting in false factors in arriving at the final determination. On pages 25, 26, 27 of this issue will be found a careful examination of this product by disinterested and expert chemists, showing the full 5 per cent. of iodine content in Iodex, also copies of letters from matured and competent physicians relating their practical experiences. Hundreds of similar reports are received daily. Clinical experience by competent practitioners, as reported in past and present issues of this Journal, confirms its sound therapeutics and shows conclusively that Iodex meets the requirements of the practical physician, notwithstanding the opinion of a prejudiced editor with an incomplete laboratory analysis. The vamping sophistries and shortcomings of the incompetent laboratory chemist is none the less grievous than quackery in practical medicine....
