After this he removed to Campden Hill, Kensington, where he constructed an observatory, to which he devoted the closest attention during the remainder of his life, and which achieved a European fame. He was one of the founders of the Royal Astronomical Society, and was for a time its president. In 1830, on the recommendation of the duke of Wellington, who was then prime minister, he received the honour of knighthood, and for several years before his death he enjoyed a pension of. 300 a year on the civil list, for his contributions to astronomical science. The account of Sir James Souths astronomical observations during his residence in Southwark is published in the Philosophical Transactions for 1825, and is accompanied by an interesting description of the fivefoot and seven-foot equatorials with which they were made. Sir James died 19 Oct. , 1867. SOUTH, Robert, D. D. , was born at Hackney 16331 and educated at Westminster School, whence he was elected to a students place at Christchurch, Oxford. In 1660 he was chosen public orator of the university, and the year following appointed chaplain to the earl of Clarendon, who gave him a prebend in the church of Westminster. In 1670 he was made canon of Christchurch, and in 1676 went with the English ambassador to Poland, of which journey he wrote a narrative. In 1678 he was presented to the rectory of Islip, Oxfordshire. In 1693 he had a controversy with Sherlock, on the...
